Comparative effectiveness of sacubitril/valsartan versus angiotensin-converting enzyme inhibitors/angiotensin receptor blockers in patients with de novo heart failure with mildly reduced and preserved ejection fraction

Authors: Bhatt, Ankeet S | European Journal Of Heart Failure | May 1, 2024 | PubMed abstract

Sacubitril/valsartan, an angiotensin receptor-neprilysin inhibitor (ARNI), is approved for the treatment of chronic heart failure (HF) and recommended by clinical practice guidelines. However, there remain large implementation gaps in the use of sacubitril/valsartan in many populations, including those with newly diagnosed HF and those at higher ends of the ejection fraction spectrum. Dr. Bhatt and colleagues utilized a real-world registry data to examine the association between sacubitril/valsartan use vs. traditional ACE inhibitors or ARBs and clinical outcomes in patients with de-novo heart failure with mildly reduced (HFmrEF) and preserved (HFpEF) ejection fractions. We found use of sacubitril/valsartan was associated with lower rates of all-cause and CV hospitalizations, complementing clinical trial-based evidence and potentially supporting the early optimization of this therapy in HF.

TPMG has started using this therapy for selected patients and is actively evaluating the best use of this new therapy.
